

SHARING TRADITIONS

A Telecollaborative Project

Attention

Attention all third, fourth, and fifth grade teachers pursuing new instructional strategies! This project presents a unique opportunity to integrate technology while raising your students' awareness of cultural diversity.

Our Goal

Students will develop a global understanding of diversity in their community and beyond through telecollaborative communication.

Students will construct personal narratives describing their families' cultural traditions and contribute to class blogs.

Who: Third, fourth, and fifth grade HCPSS teachers

What: Connect with other classes across the county and allow your students to share personal narratives describing their families' personal traditions by maintaining online blogs. Students will be able to read the blogs of others, make comments, ask questions, and respond to questions.

Where: Your school's computer lab

When: Spring 2015

Why: This experience will offer your students a chance to connect with other students while meeting writing, reading, social studies, and technology objectives.

How: Communicate with your HCPSS program coordinators and sign up for a Kidblog account today!
